Don't Pass It - Just Fund It.

There has been a lot of discussion recently about the Republican effort to block the administration's initiative to legalize many currently illegal immigrant by withholding certain funds from the Department of Homeland Security.

For the sake of brevity, we will nutshell the underlying dynamics. The administration has made new law and the Congress doesn't like it. Congress never passed the law. That has already been decided by a court. If, however, Congress then provides funds to implement the law, the implication is that the action has been approved.

It's that simple.

This fight is not about immigration. It's about who gets to make the laws.
