

Hannity's Rant

Sean Hannity was on a tear again yesterday about how Democrats have embraced early voting and mail-in voting putting them ahead by hundreds of thousands of votes on election day because Republicans favor voting on election day. He admonishes Republicans to accept alternative voting or accept losing.

What I heard, however, was him telling Republicans to set aside their ideals, their principles, and the philosophy of free and equal elections. He says that you can't fight a war with the army you want; you must fight it with the army you have.

That may be true in a hot conflict, but in a war for the philosophy of freedom, the sum of our ideals and principles IS the army that we have.

If we set those aside in order to win, we have already lost.
