

Holy Saturday,

Imagine, if you will, that yesterday, the president of the self-improvement club that you were a member of had been arrested. The police came and raided his home under a no-knock warrant. Then he had been taken out and lynched. The other members of the club had thought about holding a small service, but the police had warned that the club had been designated an anti-government group and that the same could happen to any of them. When you woke up this morning, life seemed surreal. Values and ideals that you held dear had been ripped away. Certainly, you reasoned, it was an insignificant club. All you did was hang around and talk about how to be a better person. How, you wondered, could a self-improvement club be branded treasonous? After feeling lost for most of the day, you chance it and make your way to the home of one of the others in the group. You talk a while, and he does his best to uplift you, offering only, "We can't do anything about it. I'm certain that tomorrow will be a better day."
